OUR WATER
SIMPLY MADE BETTER
BY KINETICO

OUR WATER IN CANADA

Canada enjoys an abundant supply of accessible fresh water. We are, in fact, in possession of the third largest fresh water supply in the whole world.

However, more and more Canadians are becoming increasingly aware of issues surrounding the quality of water that's in our homes. Agricultural and industrial run-off and pharmaceutical contamination threaten our drinking water sources, and as issues of contamination due to aged lead piping in municipal water infrastructures and chlorine by-products arising from our water treatment practices are brought to light, Canadians are starting to take a closer look at the water coming out of their taps.

While some water issues are invisible to the naked eye, others are very noticeable as they affect the look, taste, smell or functionality of water. Whether supplied by a municipality or by a private well, most Canadians live day-to-day struggling with hard water. Hard water contains dissolved minerals from calcium, magnesium and in many cases, may also contain dissolved metals like iron.

The telltale signs of hard water include stained glassware, limescale deposits and rust coloured stains in water using appliances and fixtures, clogged plumbing and the need to use excessive amounts of soaps to clean. Shampoos and soap don't lather when showering causing dull hair, and hard water is also slightly abrasive which often causes skin to feel dry. Most attribute these everyday issues to inadequate cleaners and detergents and poor performing appliances. Or they simply give up, and decide that these problems are just a way of life.

Dry skin and hair, bathtub ring, spots on glass and silverware, dull and dingy clothing, disappointing performance and a shortened life expectancy of water-using appliances are all problems frequently caused by hard water. Most don't realize how much time, money and energy is spent fighting the hard water battle.

Drinking water quality can also no longer be taken for granted. With public water, the government and municipalities work very hard to ensure your water is safe to drink but some contaminants may be difficult to detect or realistically treat on a large scale, or may enter the water system through gaps in the infrastructure, such as aging pipes. It's also necessary to add chemicals such as chlorine or chloramines to effectively treat and distribute water to households over long distances.

Once thought pristine, well water is also a source of concern since much groundwater has been contaminated by a variety of chemical and biological contaminants. It's no wonder many of us now think twice before taking a sip from the tap. Bottled water was once a popular alternative, but it's expensive and creates waste that's hard on the environment.

Fortunately, with Kinetico, you can provide your family with affordable soft, fresh, clean and great-tasting water without worry.
